We can experiment with different ways of printing, for example using paint or the hapazome method to make marks.

Printing is the process of making images that can be transferred onto other surfaces.

A landscape is all the visible features of an area of land.

We can create pictures using natural materials. We can stick natural materials on paper to create the illusion of something else and we can mix natural materials with water to create colours - mixing mud with water creates a brown coloured paint like material for example.
